

Ablation of Atrial Fibrillation

A service package for electrophysiological ablation of a common heart arrhythmia that includes overnight heart monitoring

About The Procedure

Atrial fibrillation (AF) is a common abnormal heart rhythm. It causes an irregular heartbeat and can lead to various symptoms. AF can increase the risk of having a stroke.

Many people with AF manage its symptoms and risks with medications. These are often ineffective and bring their own risks. An ablation procedure may also be considered for the treatment of AF and in many cases is more effective than medications.

When considering invasive procedures such as AF ablation, it is important to choose the right doctor. Does your doctor have experience with the procedure? Will he take the time to understand your goals?

Our specialists are leaders in the field of AF ablation. Each has years of experience, does his own patient assessments, and has a commitment to service and success. Many have been involved in developing the technology and techniques that are now industry standards. If you are looking for quality, then our specialists are your solution.
