

Arthroscopic hip repair

A minimally invasive outpatient procedure to rebuild the hip.

About The Procedure

The hip joint has several structures that can be torn by sports or trauma: the weight bearing or articular cartilage and the labrum, a bumper along the edge of the hip socket, which is also known as the acetabulum. In some cases, the tear is caused by an abnormal bump on the femoral head or a very deep socket; this is called femoro-acetabular impingement. A tear of the labrum can cause pain. In most cases, labral tears can be repaired with sutures placed through small incisions, with a fast recovery, great odds of return to function, and elimination of pain.

When considering a hip arthroscopic procedure, it is important to know that the surgeon who will carry out your surgery has the experience and focus to deliver the quality you want. It is also important to know what you are paying for.
